Those who fail to obtain 60 points will not receive the credits for the course.

Výsledky vzdelávania:

The aim of the seminar is to deepen students' knowledge about IR theories. The lectures and seminars will deal with various theories and their practical application in research. The crucial part of the course will be a critical discussion about these theories and the students will learn to look at the world through the perspectives of these theories. The course will begin with a critical perspective on the way IR is being taught nowadays. After that every lecture will be dedicated to one (or two) theories, first realism and neorealism, then liberalism and neoliberalism. After that it will deal with Marxism and feminism. Two seminars will be based on constructivist assumption dealing with international governmentality and the problem of depoliticization. The most recent development in IR theories will be discussed using the example of New Materialism and one topic will be dedicated to the global political ecology and one to postcolonialism and othering. The last class will focus on a practical question about changing the world, which is implicitly present in the theories.

Výsledky vzdelávania:

The aim of this course is to introduce the basic elements of development cooperation. These include the origins of development cooperation (briefly) going back to state involvement during European industrialization and then to colonial development before and after the Second World War. The students will gain knowledge about the main development theories, which make up the traditional canon of development studies. The crucial part of the course will focus on development discourse, on the current dominant approaches to development – Millennium Development Goals (until 2015) and Sustainable Development Goals (since 2015) – and on the practice of development cooperation and its problems. The course will problematize racism in development cooperation and will engage with radical critique of development in the form of the post-development approach. One lecture will be dedicated to the Slovak development cooperation and one to the migration and development phenomenon. Finally, the question “What then should we do?” will be posed to conclude the course.

Stručná osnova predmetu:

Výsledky vzdelávania:

The course aims to explore the political and public discourse about the European Union, EU-politics and policies, mainly in Slovakia but also in other European countries. The course aims to equip students with advanced level knowledge and understanding of EU as an issue in political competition, in identifying political actors, and factors which affect the public debates. Moreover, patterns of voting behaviour in EP elections across the EU are analysed.

Stručná osnova predmetu:

European Union in Political and Public Discourse focuses on public perception of the EU, and different aspects of EU understanding as well as patterns of voting behaviour in the European Parliament elections across the EU countries. It will explore also the images of EU and symbols related to the EU. Cultural patterns and images of EU integration and EU enlargement will be analyzed as well as some EU related referenda as case studies.

The methodology of the course combines several approaches – quantitative and qualitative analyses, discourse analyses, but also analyses of marketing, campaigning and advertising. In addition to the academic readings media and campaign materials, public opinion polls, and other resources will be used.

Those who fail to obtain 60 points will not receive the credits for the course.

Výsledky vzdelávania:

The aim of this course is to offer an eclectic critical approach to International Political Economy together with selected topics of current interest. We will begin with a discussion about how the IPE is constituted as a discipline and then will discuss what capitalism is by focusing on its beginnings. The question what money is and how it is connected to debt will be answered in the fourth class. Afterwards a basic introduction into the economic models will follow together with a critique of these models. Different approaches to economy will include environmental economics, feminist economics, cultural political economy together with anthropology of economy and postcolonial approach to economy. A more practically oriented classes will deal with the recent discussion about varieties of capitalism in Central and Eastern Europe, with the discussion about the most recent economic crisis. A guest lecture by Ivan Lesay will focus on the making of the Slovak economy and its connection to the Eurozone crisis. Overall the students should get an overview of the traditional IPE as well as its criticism from various standpoints.

Stručná osnova predmetu:

1. Introductory seminar

Stručná osnova predmetu:

How can it be justified that some rule over others? How can anyone be obligated to obey the rules of someone else? In how far do socio-economic inequalities play a role in political power? In order to evaluate and criticise politics today and in the past one has to understand the central ideas of political thought. Political theorists have been and still are trying to develop standards and norms according to which it should be possible to delineate what our world ought to be like. Those normative ideas must be assessed critically in how far they help understand contemporary political systems. This course, therefore, examines major texts in the Western tradition of the history of political thought from Marx to post-foundational political thought. Topics discussed during the course will be inter alia: sovereignty and authority; the nature of consent and democratic participation; historical materialism and capitalism; the will to power; the role of conflict; functions of the public sphere Class Sessions: 1. Introduction to Political Thought; 2. Utilitarianism: Bentham and Mill; 3. Communism and ideology: Marx; 4. The Impulse towards Justice: Nietzsche; 5. A theory of Justice: Rawls; 6. The philosophical foundations of capitalism: Adam Smith; 7. Deliberative democracy: Habermas; 8. Power/Knowledge: Foucault; 9. Ironical Commitment: Rorty; 10. Post-foundational political thought: Lefort and Laclau
