Furthermore, the aim is to explain to the students the similarities and differences between scientific investigation and other forms of                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |                                                      | gaining insight in the social life. Overall, the course is designed to familiarize graduate students with various research strategies and styles of social science research (qualitative in particular) and to prepare them to employ those methods in writing their seminar papers and final theses. The aim is to give to the students an insight into research from inside, introduce them to the logic of research process, explain to them particular methods of data collection and analysis emphasizing the method of grounded theory and case study. Students will engage in practical research exercises in a combination of individual and team assignments as a preparation to the seminars. Particular methods taught during this course include interviewing, coding, Qualitative Content Analysis (QCA), Critical Discourse Analysis (CDA) and Legal Analysis (LA).

| Learning outcomes:The course is an introduction to data analysis and quantitative research methods. Students will learn how to conduct surveys and experiments and how to analyse various types of data and interpret the results by using jamovi statistical software. The course is practically oriented – lab exercises will provide students with opportunities to acquire the necessary analytical rigour and insight required for conducting graduate-level quantitative research projects.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |                                                       |
| Class syllabus:1. Introduction + R setup, jamovi setup and getting started; 2. Scientific approach to social phenomena + data; 3. Research design + descriptive statistics; 4. Measurement + graphs; 5. Surveys and questionnaires + correlations; 6. Reading week; 7. Causality + hypothesis testing; 8. Experimental design + group comparisons; 9. Prediction + linear regression; 10. Evaluation research + multiple regression; 11.-13. Group project; 14. Wrap-up and concluding discussion.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                       |
