Number of credits: 3
Recommended semester: 4.
Educational level: I.II.
Prerequisites: EBF.IKT/E-S-ET-018/15 - Chapters of the History of Philosophy 1
Course requirements: Completion in the school exam period. Elaboration of an essay on a topic assigned by the teacher. Of the final grade of the course, the grade of the essay will be 20%. Oral examination during the examination period. The oral examination will account for 80% of the final course grade. Compulsory attendance at the lectures, two absences are tolerated.
Learning outcomes: This course is designed to introduce students of Protestant theology to key issues and figures in the history of Western philosophy from the late patristic period to the present. In doing so, it takes into account both the context of Protestant theology and the treatment of issues in the history of philosophy of religion. Upon completion of the course, the student will gain a basic understanding of selected philosophical concepts along with their application to a specific historical period. The knowledge thus acquired will enable the student to apply the relevant concepts in his/her further studies, especially in the fields of systematic theology, church history, history of dogma and philosophy of religion.
Class syllabus: In terms of content and themes, we will focus on the area of philosophical problems, which are historically defined by the period of the late patristic period up to the present day. We dedicate the period of patristic philosophy to its chief representative, Augustine. Within medieval philosophy, we emphasize in particular the controversy over universals and the conceptions of the representatives of late scholasticism (Roger Bacon, Duns Scotus, William Ockham). Thematically, we will focus mainly on ontological issues with reference to semantic problems related to theological terms. We will devote the period of Renaissance philosophy to the problem of the Reformation in the context of philosophical thought, taking into account ethical issues. We examine modern philosophy against the background of the debate between empiricism and rationalism (epistemological issues), which we follow up with a basic characterization of the Enlightenment and an explanation of its relation to religion (issues in political and social philosophy). In particular, we will present the history of 19th- and 20th-century philosophy through a comprehensive characterization of Immanuel Kant's work and the currents of thought that responded to Kant's philosophical initiative. Finally, we will discuss the most important currents of 20th century philosophy: phenomenology, existentialism, structuralism, and analytic philosophy, with an emphasis on semantic issues. We will also introduce key figures in philosophy of religion, or 20th century philosophy of religion.

COURSE DESCRIPTION

Academic year: 2022/2023
University: Comenius University Bratislava
Faculty: Evangelical Lutheran Theological Faculty
Course ID: EBF/E-003/15	Course title: Introduction to Logic
Educational activities: Type of activities: seminar Number of hours: per week: 2 per level/semester: 28 Form of the course: on-site learning
Number of credits: 3
Recommended semester: 1., 3., 5., 7., 9.
Educational level: I.II.
Prerequisites:
Course requirements: Students will write five tests on an ongoing basis. They will be graded on a scale from A to F. The indicative grading scale is A 90%, B 80%, C 70%, D 60%, E 50%. Students need to score at least half of the maximum marks on each test. Otherwise, no credit will be awarded. Students may retake each test a maximum of two times. Each student is allowed to be absent without giving a reason for at most one seminar. Absence from more than one seminar must be justified and backed up, e.g. by a medical certificate. If the seminar does not take place due to extraordinary reasons, it will be substituted on another date as agreed. Such reasons do not include study leave granted by the Rector of the University or the Dean of the Faculty, nor do they include the possible absence of the lecturer due to sick leave.
Learning outcomes: The goal of this course is to introduce Protestant theology students to the fundamentals of logic that are relevant to theology. Attention will be given to two classical logical systems, propositional and predicate logic. In addition, we will formulate some important fragments of the so-called Aristotelian subject-predicate logic. Upon completion of the course, the student will acquire a basic knowledge of selected concepts in logic and methodology of the sciences, along with their application to a specific historical period. The knowledge thus acquired will enable him/her to apply the relevant concepts in his/her further studies, especially in the fields of systematic theology, church history, or the history of dogma and philosophy of religion.
Class syllabus: I. Introduction: Competencies of logic - reasoning and argument, the concept of inference, the subject of logic, natural and formal languages, basic logical principles. One test. II. Aristotelian subject-predicate logic and categorical syllogism: Subject-predicate structure of propositions, quantity and quality of propositions; logical square - contrariety, contradiction, subcontrariety, subsumption (subalternation). Figures and valid modes of categorical syllogism - Venn diagrams, proofs in Boolean algebra (in the language of set theory), examples of judgements in natural language. Two tests. III. Propositional calculus: Definition of the system of propositional calculus - syntax and semantics of the language of propositional calculus; propositional conjunctions: negation, conjunction, disjunction, implication, equivalence. Propositional conjunctions in natural language: and; not true that, if - so; if; then, when; or; either - or; then and only if; only if; unless; except if; else; neither - nor. Tabular method - tautologies, contradictions, neutral formulas. Propositional-logical inference. Arguments and their analysis from the point of view of propositional calculus. Natural deduction for propositional calculus. Basic and some derived transformation rules. Proof in the system of natural deduction: direct and indirect proof. One test.

III. First-order logic: Definition of the system of first-order logic - predicates, individual expressions, quantifiers and individual variables. Syntax and semantics of first-order logic. Natural language and first-order logic - individual and categorical propositions. Natural deduction for predicate logic. Basic and some derived transformation rules. Proof in the system of natural deduction. One test.

COURSE DESCRIPTION

Academic year: 2022/2023
University: Comenius University Bratislava
Faculty: Evangelical Lutheran Theological Faculty
Course ID: EBF.IKT/E-S-ET-076/15	Course title: Philosophy of Religion
Educational activities: Type of activities: lecture Number of hours: per week: 3 per level/semester: 42 Form of the course: on-site learning
Number of credits: 3
Recommended semester: 6.
Educational level: I.II.
Prerequisites: EBF.IKT/E-S-ET-026/15 - Chapters of the History of Philosophy 2
Course requirements: I. Elaboration of an essay on a topic assigned by the teacher. Of the final grade of the course, the grade of the essay will be 50%. II. There will be three written tests of 40 points each (120 points in total) during the semester. To obtain an overall grade of A on all three tests, a total of at least 100 points on all three tests, a grade of B of at least 90 points, a grade of C of at least 80 points, a grade of D of at least 70 points, and a grade of E of at least 60 points are required. The written tests will account for 50% of the final course grade. III. The final grade of the course consists of the sum of the overall grade of the test and the grade of the essay. Compulsory attendance at the lectures, two absences are tolerated.
Learning outcomes: The student understands the subject matter, the arguments (theistic and atheistic) of the philosophy of religion, and their critique. The student will acquire the basic methodological skills to be able to engage in polemics within classical and contemporary debates in the philosophy of religion. He or she will also acquire knowledge of the basic themes that are the subject of these debates and an understanding of their broader philosophical context. The methodological skills and content knowledge acquired will enable him/her to grasp and critically evaluate particular arguments in the philosophy of religion.
Class syllabus: In terms of content and subject matter, we will focus on the classical deductive and inductive arguments concerning the a priori "proofs" of God's existence (ontological proof) and the aposteriori "proofs" of God's existence (cosmological, teleological, moral, and proof from religious experience). Other topics covered in the subject of philosophy of religion include: the method, subject matter, and content of philosophy of religion; the problem of evil; the relationship of soul (or mind) and body; religious language; religious diversity and interreligious dialogue; religion and political theory; the concept of God (omnipotence, omniscience, power, eternity); and finally, the relationship between science and faith.

COURSE DESCRIPTION

Academic year: 2022/2023
University: Comenius University Bratislava
Faculty: Evangelical Lutheran Theological Faculty
Course ID: EBF.KNZ/E-S-ET-082/15	Course title: Readings in the Greek New Testament 1
Educational activities: Type of activities: practicals Number of hours: per week: 2 per level/semester: 28 Form of the course: on-site learning
Number of credits: 2
Recommended semester: 3.
Educational level: I.II.
Prerequisites: EBF.KNZ/E-S-ET-013/15 - Koine Greek 2
Course requirements: The scale of assessment (preliminary/final): 100% preliminary assessment. During the semester, students have to complete two written exams (max 200 points in total). Besides the exams, also the activity of students by reading and analyzing the New Testament texts (max 50 points), as well as their attendance (max 50 points), are assessed. Students who do not gain at least 60 points for each of the two written exams, will not be granted credits. Grades scale: 300 – 285 = A 284 – 264 = B 263 – 240 = C 239 – 213 = D 212 – 180 = E 179 – 0 = Fx Scale of assessment (preliminary/final): 100% / 0%
Learning outcomes: A student is gaining skills in reading, translating, and analyzing the chosen texts of the New Testament corpus. In this way, a student establishes the ability of required erudition in the field of Koine Greek on an advanced level, as a basic precondition for biblical exegesis, and hermeneutical analysis and interpretation of the New Testament writings.
Class syllabus: • Introductory issues concerning the methodology and particular chosen texts of the New Testament corpus • Individual preparatory work consisting of lexical and grammar analysis of the chosen New Testament texts, reading, translating, and analyzing the texts, paying attention to language phenomena and peculiarities. The work is based on an intensive lecturer-student interaction.

Scale of assessment (preliminary/final): 50/50
Learning outcomes: The objectives of this seminar are to understand and articulate the main ways of relating religion and science and to apply the newly acquired knowledge and critical thinking skills in analyzing and discussing the challenges of transhumanism. Along the way, students will learn the key figures in this discussion and their views, as well as some of the arguments currently put forward on relevant topics. By the end of this course students will be able to: 1) identify the position held by central figures in these debates; 2) articulate the key issues in the debates between science and religion; 3) appraise critically the potential benefits and threats of Transhumanism; 4) locate their own perspective among the positions we will have considered.
Class syllabus: Introduction: Why study science and religion interactions and its existing models. A short introduction to Transhumanism as a philosophical/scientific movement. History of science and religion interactions: medieval synthesis, Copernicus, Galileo, Newton, Darwin, and the Big Bang. Religion and the Philosophy of science: Realism and Instrumentalism; research methods and the investigations of reality (explanation, ontology, epistemology); logical positivism; Karl Popper; Thomas Kuhn. Science and the Philosophy of Religion: Proofs of God's existence; the ambiguity of proof; God's action, miracles and the laws of nature; natural theology; Creation and the uniformity of nature.

Models and analogies in science and religion. The big questions of Science and Religion today: morality, epistemology, existential relevance, theodicy, design and purpose. The commendable goals of Transhumanism and its potential benefits. The questionable goals of Transhumanism and its potential threats.

Learning outcomes: A student has the knowledge of the contents and thoughts of particular New Testament writings (Gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, Epistles) worked out by relevant historical-critical, exegetical analysis, particularly: a systematic presentation of the issues concerning the topic of historical Jesus, a chronology of his life, and the theological interpretation of the key topics of Jesus' message and teaching, all based on various approaches and interpretation made by particular authors (scholars). In this way, a student is able to prove knowledge of the history and recent state of research in this field of investigation. At the same time, a student has gained the ability of independent theological evaluation of particular topics and questions, employing the gained knowledge by taking his/her own stand on relevant and actual questions.
Class syllabus: • The history and development of the New Testament theology

- The history and development of the historical Jesus research, its recent state, particular approaches, and hypotheses
- The sources of the historical Jesus research, chronology of Jesus' life, and a whole evaluation of current findings
- The main topics of Jesus' message and teaching, including their theological interpretation (Continually within the span of the weeks of the semester).
