| Learning outcomes:The students have a basic overview of the functioning of the media and the media environment in Slovakia. They are aware of the dangers of the phenomenon of disinformation, they understand the functioning, philosophy and threat of disinformation websites, their hypocrisy and economic interests. They understand the differences between information sources and are also familiar with the basics of media education and information literacy in Slovakia. Based on the curriculum and the project of lectures, they are ready to pass on the acquired knowledge at secondary schools in their home regions in Slovakia. Graduates of the course are also ready to professionally master the cross-cutting theme of media education at secondary and primary schools in Slovakia.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |                                        |

| Learning outcomes:Students have core competencies which together form the main prerequisites for their history teaching in each type of school. These are especially; the competence to define the main categories, the essential features of teaching history, then the competence to carry out goal-oriented activities, to work actively with the structure of learning objectives and to cognitively differentiate and rate them. Another competence the students possess is to arrange learning paths - methods and, on their basis, to stage learning figures - situations and, consequently, to reflect on their own teaching.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                  |

| Learning outcomes:Students have core competencies which together form the main prerequisites for their history teaching in each type of school. These are especially; the competence to define the main categories, the essential features of teaching history, then the competence to carry out goal-oriented activities, to work actively with the structure of learning objectives and to cognitively differentiate and rate them. Another competence the students possess is to arrange learning paths - methods and, on their basis, to stage learning figures - situations and, consequently, to reflect on their own teaching.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                  |

EQUIPMENT AND EXERCISES: Tasks and exercises will focus on the ability of students to apply the acquired theoretical knowledge in solving various tasks: finding a topic, research problem, formulation of research goals, research questions, which theories are most often confirmed in pedagogical research - refuted, deduction of theory towards determination of variables and formulation of hypotheses for quantitatively oriented research, research data collection procedures, used methods and tools of data collection, application of research data analysis procedures - scaling, observation sheets, open, axial coding, or thematic analysis on research data mediated by teachers . For the elaboration of tasks and exercises the student will be able to obtain a total of max. 30 points.II. INTERIM TEST:The continuous test will contain test items focused on the curriculum of the first 3 topics / chapters of the compulsory textbook, for which you can collectively obtain max. 30 points. The midterm test will be completed by the student in person or remotely (according to the current epidemiological situation) via the MS Forms application during the semester after taking over 4 topics.Final rating:III. FINAL TEST:The final test will contain test items focused on the subject matter of the next 4 topics + some items focused on the repetition of topics 1,2 and 3,4, for which you will be able to obtain a max. 40 points. A minimum of 50% success rate is required to successfully complete the course. |                                                             |

CLASSIFICATION:

A - 91 - 100 (excellent - excellent results),

B - 90 - 81 (very good - above average standard),

C - 80 - 71 (good - normal reliable work),

D - 70 - 61 (satisfactory - acceptable results),

E - 60 - 51 (sufficient - the results meet the minimum criteria),

Fx - 50 - 0 (insufficient).

The teacher accepts max. 2 absences with proven documents.

The exact date of the mid-term evaluation will be announced at the beginning of the semester.

Exam dates will be published via AIS no later than the last week of the semester.

Weight of the mid-term / final evaluation: 70/30.

Scale of assessment (preliminary/final): = 70/30.

Learning outcomes:

Upon successful completion of the course, students know the basic methodological concepts, stages and principles of quantitative and qualitative pedagogical research. They have the skills needed to study and analyze scientific studies in pedagogy and understand the research of others. They are able to design their own educational research, research or action research of the teacher and implement an independent research effort. They have the ability to choose appropriate and meaningful research topics, deftly develop a research project, collect and empirically correct analysis of research data. They can then interpret, defend and publish research data meaningfully and creatively.

Class syllabus:

1. Pedagogical research - definition of basic terms: cognition, science in human cognition, scientific theory, research, pedagogical research, theory, practice, method, methodology. Relation of pedagogical research to practice (R&D). Research - action research - evaluation.

2. Planning, organization and implementation of field pedagogical research: Stages of research work. Research plan and diary of a pedagogical researcher. Research information preparation. Ethics in research work.

3. Thinking about a research problem: The difference between a topic and a research problem. Thinking and judgment of a researcher. Selecting the essential and distinguishing partial phenomena from the general background. Preparation of a research project.

4. Qualitative and qualitative research design: Comparison of qualitative and quantitative research, their philosophical background, goals, focus and procedures in the collection and processing of research data.

5. Qualitative oriented pedagogical research: Selected currents (branches) of qualitative research: Ethnography, Phenomenological analysis, Narrative and Dramaturgical approach, Conversational analysis. Qualitative research procedures. Terrain access. Research methods used in qualitative research. Quality standards of qualitative research.

6. Quantitative oriented pedagogical research and its main phases: Determining the research problem. Variables and hypotheses and their place in pedagogical research. Hypothesis testing in scientific research. Measurement and quantification in pedagogical research.

7. Determination of the selection of research data collection methods: research method, research tool, validity, reliability and correlation coefficient of the research tool. Selection, study and preparation, or creation of tools for collecting research data.

8. Methods of research data collection: Observation, questionnaire, assessment scales, interviews, tests of knowledge and skills, sociometry, semantic differential and pedagogical experiment

9. Processing of obtained research data: Preparation for analysis, Analysis and interpretation of obtained research data (verbal or numerical). Discussion of research conclusions. Making recommendations for practice.

| Learning outcomes:The aim of the course is to introduce the theoretical concepts of multilingualism as well as the multilingual situation and its research in German-speaking countries. Students will acquire the basic skills necessary to prepare research and carry out their own research assignment, focusing on the use of the German language in Slovakia in the context of multilingual communication. At the same time, they will reflect on their own sources of multilingualism and their own linguistic repertoire in the context of biographically oriented multilingualism research practices.                       |                                         |

| Learning outcomes:By completing the course, the student will gain a selective overview of the thematic and genre diversity of recent Norwegian film production. The aim of the course is to learn more about Norwegian society, its social and generational composition and its perspective on contemporary, historical, specific and universal themes through films. The aim is also to highlight, through discussions, the stimulating elements of film language in the peculiar and diverse poetics of Norwegian films.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |                                                     |

| Learning outcomes:The students will acquire a deep understanding of the key historical biographies of the 19th century personalities, that stem from the British, French, Russian, Habsburg and Ottoman empires, as well as from the Principality of Serbia. The course „Personalities of the 19th century“ is divided into three groups of personalities that are deemed relevant to the crucial socio-political transformations of the 19th century, namely: 1) „thinkers, scholars, experts“; 2) „revolutionaries and reformers“ and 3) „explorers, colonizers and businessmen“. This design, that relies on comparative perspective and source-based discussion, aims to equip students with competencies in historical interpretation and source hermeneutics, as well as in fundamental orienting within scholarly literature on the topics relevant to the course. In this way, the course allows students to understand and learn how to historically analyze and interpret texts, different contexts, and uncover correlations of different streams of political thought, in a comparative perspective that accounts for the diversity of the European experience. The course pays special attention to developing historical reasoning and argumentation skills based on the key problems raised by each of the selected personalities' biography. Upon completing the course, students will be able to orientate in wider European and global historical and scholarly debates, relying on these biographies as entry points to discussing more complex contexts and issues, relevant to the challenges of the present day. Students will, moreover, be able to employ secondary skills developed throughout the course, namely professional and effective oral and written expression, as well as historical argumentation. |                                                          |

| Learning outcomes:The student knows the methods of text analysis and has the linguistic competences necessary to actively understand newspaper articles, professional texts and statistics of professional literature and to be able to extract relevant information from them. Using his/her knowledge of facts, he/she is able to engage in debate on current social issues in German-speaking countries and to place these in a political, historical, social and cultural context.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |                                                                          |
| Class syllabus:The course focuses on the political landscape of German-speaking countries, reflecting current political and media debates in Germany, Austria and Switzerland (the so-called D-A-CH countries). We analyze German-language media, discuss them, and acquire the relevant context necessary to properly assess and understand them (historical development, political system, specificities of the three countries, etc. ). Main topics of the course:1) Space and demography: internal and mutual heterogeneity of the D-A-CH countries, demographic trends, D-A-CH as an immigration destination in the 20th century, and current (Gastarbeiter, migration and labour market policies).2) Economy: economic developments and policies in the context of globalization, the most important industries and sectors in D-A-CH and their current direction3) Society: historical antecedents and traumas, problematic issues (inequalities, unemployment, marginalisation) and the welfare state4) State and nation: contrasting view of national consciousness and identity issues, defining tendencies versus emphasising commonalities, EU membership or non-membership5) Politics: specificities of countries and their political systems, political environment, ideological background, issues of political culture, constitutions and foreign policy; federalism, specificities of countries, implications of federalism6) Mass media: the press in D-A-CH, global developments and national specificities, the state and the media (affairs and debates in recent years in Germany and Austria), social media and democracy, |                                                                          |

| Course requirements:Assessment of learning outcomes is carried out exclusively by continuous monitoring of learning results during the teaching part of the semester. Successful completion of the course is conditioned by the fulfilment of continuously assigned tasks and activity in class. Number of acceptable absences from class 2. The course will be taught alternately one week at the faculty and the other week at the partner institution. In case of further absences resulting from objectively justifiable, documented reasons, the student has the possibility to pass the course subject to the following condition: for each absence beyond the specified scope, the student submits to the instructor a report of 5 standard pages on a previously assigned and consulted topic.The classification scale is the following: 100-92 % of the max. number of points A, 91 – 84 % B, 83 – 76 % C, 75 – 68 % D, 67 – 60 % E, <60% Fx Violation of academic ethics will be punished, and the student will lose all the received points in the relevant assessment.Scale of assessment preliminary/final: 100/0Scale of assessment (preliminary/final): Scale of assessment preliminary/final: 100/0 |                                             |
| Learning outcomes:The student of history (both single-discipline and teaching combination) has contact with the professional environment and organizational culture of the cooperating institutions and has hands-on experience in how to apply the theory, methodological frameworks and soft skills acquired in the course of study in practice. A vision is made available to the student of how students of the history programme at the second level of study can improve their qualifications by completing a professional practice organically incorporated into courses on career development in scientific research, memory, fund, cultural, educational institutions.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |                                             |

| Course requirements:Assessment of learning outcomes is carried out exclusively by continuous monitoring of learning results during the teaching part of the semester. Successful completion of the course is conditioned by the fulfilment of continuously assigned tasks and activity in class. The course will be taught alternately one week at the faculty and the other week at the partner institution. Number of acceptable absences from class 2. In case of further absences resulting from objectively justifiable, documented reasons, the student has the possibility to pass the course subject to the following condition: for each absence beyond the specified scope, the student submits to the instructor a report of 5 standard pages on a previously assigned and consulted topic.The classification scale is the following: 100-92 % of the max. number of points A, 91 – 84 % B, 83 – 76 % C, 75 – 68 % D, 67 – 60 % E, <60% Fx Violation of academic ethics will be punished, and the student will lose all the received points in the relevant assessment.Scale of assessment preliminary/final: 100/0Scale of assessment (preliminary/final): Scale of assessment preliminary/final: 100/0 |                                             |
| Learning outcomes:The student of history (both single-discipline and teaching combination) has contact with the professional environment and organizational culture of the cooperating institutions and has hands-on experience in how to apply the theory, methodological frameworks and soft skills acquired in the course of study in practice. A vision is made available to the student of how students of the history programme at the second level of study can improve their qualifications by completing a professional practice organically incorporated into courses on career development in scientific research, memory, fund, cultural, educational institutions.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |                                             |

| Learning outcomes:Students have a more detailed overview of the political system of the newly formed Czechoslovakia and the discourse on a national and selected regional scale at the time. They know how to gather information on local political gatherings, what was considered important by the official record-makers, and at the same time they have broader knowledge about types of ceremonies held for various state events. By preparing their seminar papers, they can more closely identify the main topics of the politics of the time in the periodical press, and describe the course of selected celebrations or demonstrations. |                                                                                                        |

| Course requirements:The students' results are evaluated exclusively by continuously checking their performance during the teaching part of the semester. Student are classified in the last lesson of the credit week. During the teaching period of the semester, students actively participate in practical tasks related to reading and interpretation of the source material (provided by the teacher, assigned in advance). Students are required to put in individual work as part of preparation (in form of three assignments). Three times during semester, each of them is assigned an example of a written source in manuscript form (at least two weeks in advance). They are then expected to prepare its elementary paleographic analysis and transription. This is then presented during a lesson, combined with a discussion, during which the source is an object of historical analysis. In case of unsatisfactory fulfillment of the assignment (repeated three times a semester), there is a possibility of a substitute, i.e. the teacher assigns the student another document. There is the limitation, however, that each such unsatisfactorily presened document can be substituted only once. After meeting this requirement, during the last meeting in the semester a colloquy is organised where each student is allotted one of the sources assigned during the semester and, subsequently, reads and interprets it.Grading scale:A = 100% – 92%B = 91% – 84%C = 83% – 76%D = 75% – 68%E = 67% – 60%Fx = 59% – 0%Violation of academic ethics will be punished, and the student will lose all the received points in the relevant assessment.Scale of assessment (preliminary/final): 100/0 |                                                                                                                         |

| Course requirements:The credit granting scheme consist of two parts:70% preliminary - students are required to take active part at the seminars, namely reading, translating and interpreting medieval diplomatic sources written in Latin (charters, letters, forms, etc.). A minor part of the seminars is a discussion of those elements of the relevant source that do not concern their content (publisher, reason for issuing, motivation, authentication, sealing, etc.).30% final - transcript of a charter. At the first session, students are assigned a specific source they need to transcribe. They also need to prepare a written paper consisting of up to 2 standard pages (3600 characters with spaces). In their papers, students need to summarize the content of the source, evaluate its authenticity, the publisher's motivation, etc. If possible, students are assigned sources having to do with the topic of their theses. To be granted the necessary credits, students need to submit the transcript and accompanying written paper by the credit week (on the day of the last seminar).Grading scale:A = 100% – 92%B = 91% – 84%C = 83% – 76%D = 75% – 68%E = 67% – 60%Fx = 59% – 0%Violation of academic ethics will be punished, and the student will lose all the received points in the relevant assessment.Maximum number of unjustified absences: 2Scale of assessment (preliminary/final): 70/30 |                                                                          |
| Learning outcomes:At the end of the course, students have basic knowledge of Latin paleography and its development, and can read and understand medieval documents. They also have a basic knowledge of medieval documents as basic sources for researching medieval history. They are familiar with the structure of medieval documents and the system of Latin abbreviations. After completing the course, students                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                          |

| Course requirements:Students are evaluated based on their continuous work and final results. The preliminary part accounts for 60% of their score. For this purpose, students are required to continuously prepare for the seminars, read specified scholarly texts and take active part when reading and interpreting the sources during the different seminars. Part of the seminars is also the presentation of the basics of creating (not only) digital editions of sources. To obtain the remaining 40% of the overall score, students are required to submit a final draft of the digitized source. This requires reading, probably also translating, assessing the source, being familiar with its context, as well as being familiar with XML coding language and TEI digitization standards. Students who fail to submit their final theses will not be assessed.Maximum number of unjustified absences: 2 per term.The exact progression, a more detailed list of the lectures, as well as the deadline for submitting the final thesis will be announced at the beginning of the semester.Grading scale:A = 100% – 92%B = 91% – 84%C = 83% – 76%D = 75% – 68%E = 67% – 60%Fx = 59% – 0%Violation of academic ethics will be punished, and the student will lose all the received points in the relevant assessment.Scale of assessment (preliminary/final): 60/40 |                                                                                                                               |
| Learning outcomes:Throughout the course, students get acquainted with the source documents concerning the early modern period (16th-18th century), mostly written in a form of Slovak prior to its codification. Student get an overview and knowledge of sources of different genres and nature. Focus is primarily made on reading, followed by the interpretation and assessment of the sources. At the seminar,                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                               | students become familiar with the basics of editing sources in a digital form. After successfully completing the course, students are able to identify, read and interpret the context and circumstances in which the source originated. They can also produce basic digital drafts of source on their own.

Class syllabus:

Critical editions of sources. Overview of the most important source databases and (digital) editions.

2. Basic rules for editing early modern sources.

3. Platforms for the text recognition of historical documents (Transkribus, ...)

4. - 7. Source reading and interpreting - selection fitting the needs of students (study cases on the example of the sources to their diploma theses)

8. Basics of document digitization - Basics of XML language.

9. Basics of document digitization - TEI standards.

10. Basics of document digitization (practical part)

Languages necessary to complete the course:

Slovak

Latin - reading

German - reading

Notes:

Students will be asked to use their own laptops during lessons and to install freely available, open source programs needed for work.

The course thematically corresponds with the research grants, currently realized at the Department of Slovak History, namely: APVV-16-0374 and APVV-20-0598.

| Learning outcomes:The seminar has the character of a research seminar, emphasizing the students' own research work. It deepens and applies the knowledge from the lecture German Language and Culture in Slovakia in the research work. Students will learn about the history of German language and culture in one of the selected dialect islands in Slovakia. They will gain a deeper knowledge of the dialectal varieties of German in the region and get to know important local cultural personalities. They will learn how to work with historical written sources (transcribe and edit manuscripts) and prepare a scholarly text on a given topic for publication and prepare archival or field research. The final output of the seminar will be either a jointly prepared publication, subsequently published either in a professional periodical or on the department's website, or group field research (oral history, dialect recordings, etc.) |                                          |
| Class syllabus:The seminar focuses on the activities of Germans in Spiš, Hauerland or Bratislava in the fields of education, literature, architecture, social life and politics in the context of Hungarian, Czechoslovak and Slovak history. It will focus on one selected epoch, which will be examined from the perspective of linguistics, literary history and cultural and social realities. Theoretically, the graduates of the course will learn about the processes of the formation of ethnic identity in the past and in the present, using the phenomenon of regional traditions and historical awareness as an example.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |                                          |

| Learning outcomes:The students gain knowledge about the epigraphic sources – Latin inscriptions and about epigraphy as a science and its importance for the study of ancient history. They know the basic rules of reading ancient epigraphic sources and they can interpret them in a historical context. They can work with ancient epigraphic sources of different types (fasti Romani, diplomata, miliaria, instrumenta publica, tituli sacri, tituli sepulcrales...) especially with grave inscriptions. With their interpretation they exhibit their knowledge in the form of presentation and discussion of their interpretations. After finishing the course, the students can work with epigraphic sources (reading, resolving abbreviations, translating, and interpreting them) and apply them to their research. |                                                                                        |

| Learning outcomes:Students will become familiar with the basic phenomena that characterized political thinking from the late Middle Ages to the early modern period. The focus of attention will be on the Central European context, thanks to which students will also gain an overview of the forms of the relationship between the "center" and the "periphery" and the possibilities of intellectual exchange in the pre-modern era. In addition to knowledge about the main trends (absolutist, republican, estate, patriotic and other discourses), they will also gain basic knowledge about the methodological possibilities of research within the history of ideas and the potential problems caused by the terminology used and the changing meanings of relevant concepts and terms over time. |                                                                                              |

| Learning outcomes:Students are familiar with the controversies around the Slovak statehood, nation and language between 1918 and 1938. They can apply an analytical approach to assess different argumentation approaches among Slovak politicians and intellectuals on topics like the Slovak - Czechoslovak nation, centralism, autonomy, and the definition of Slovak culture and language. Their knowledge is based on their analysis of the confrontation of the then two rival entities, namely the Czechoslovak and the Slovak nationalism.                                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                   |

| Learning outcomes:The students are able to identify political trends in South-Eastern Europe (Balkan) during the 19th and 20th Centuries. Except general characteristic of the interior policy in various regions and states (the Ottoman Empire, the forming so-called national states), the student is also able to orient in the policy of the Great Powers to Balkan (influences and conflicts between European powers). That gets them to be oriented also in current political situation in this region.                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                |

| Learning outcomes:The student can identify the political situation in Europe after Second World War along with the integration process. He can interpretate the integration of Europe by means of methodological approaches. All students understand the differences between military, political and economic integration as well as interconnections among them. They also have ability to historicize political processes which can often appear as linear. Through working with multiple interpretative approaches, the students have the competencies which enable them to analyse the development of institutions, the role of political actors, and the relevance of the international situation for their mutual interaction. At the same time, European integration is a focal phenomenon whose consequences are often underestimated, not least due to the absence of historical awareness and consequently resulting implications for social ordering. |                                                             |

| Learning outcomes:Students have knowledge of social history and daily life in ancient Rome (family, children, education, upbringing, housing, clothing, etc.). After successful completion of this course, students gain the basic understanding of the social history of Rome and its everyday life, as well as an in-depth analysis of selected sources on the topic. The students know how to work with the ancient sources of various kinds, they are able to interpret and evaluate them. The students are able to apply the basic rules of scholarly work (orientation in the literature and sources on the period of ancient history, forms of citation, academic ethics) and are able to demonstrate knowledge of scholarly techniques for presenting their own findings in oral and written form. |                                                           |

| Course requirements:The students' results are evaluated exclusively by continuously checking their performance during the lesson period of the term. During the first two teaching weeks, students choose a research area – an aristocratic family of the Kingdom of Hungary. In the following weeks, students research this area on their own and present their results at the beginning of the lesson, following the teacher's explanation. Students present their results verbally (without any written support). To successfully complete the course, students need to work systematically, regularly informing the teacher about the progress they have achieved in their research. The deadline of their tasks cannot be postponed as they are connected to specifically scheduled lessons. Likewise, the teacher may not consider every research report by the student to be satisfactorily completed. To successfully meet their tasks, students need to successfully complete at least 6 out of 10 assignments. They are evaluated in the credit week according to the following scale: 10 adequately completed tasks A, 9 adequately completed tasks B, 8 adequately completed tasks C, 7 adequately completed tasks D, 6 adequately completed tasks E, 5 and less adequately completed tasks.To successfully meet their term tasks, students can have no more than 2 absences.Violation of academic ethics will be punished, and the student will lose all the received points in the relevant assessment.Scale of assessment (preliminary/final): Scale of assessment preliminary/final: 100/0 |                                                                                               |
| Learning outcomes:At the end of the course, students have an overview of one of the current research topics in Slovak / Central European historiography. Students are familiar with the nobility in general and with everyday life at the court of the aristocracy in the Kingdom of Hungary in the early modern period. Students can work not only with edited written sources that provide insight into the private spheres of the high nobility, but are also familiar with history of art and anthropological research on the issue.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |                                                                                               |

| Learning outcomes:The February coup carried out by the communists in 1948 is one of the key events in our history. In addition to domestic policy, it also impacted foreign policy. In addition to the totalitarian political system, it also brought complete satelliteization of the republic. Students will gain knowledge about the causes, course and consequences of the communist coup, as well as about its foreign policy implications and how the Sovietization of the country took place.                |                                                                               |

| Course requirements:The students' results are evaluated exclusively by continuously checking their performance during the teaching part of the semester. During the first two teaching weeks, students choose a research area – a specific feudal lordship located in the Kingdom of Hungary. In the following weeks, students research this area on their own and present their results at the beginning of the lesson, following the teacher's explanation. Students present their results verbally (without any written support). To successfully complete the course, students need to work systematically, regularly informing the teacher about the progress they have achieved in their research. The deadline of their tasks cannot be postponed as they are connected to specifically scheduled lessons. Likewise, the teacher may not consider every research report by the student to be satisfactorily completed. To successfully meet their tasks, students need to successfully complete at least 6 out of 10 assignments. They are evaluated in the credit week according to the following scale: 10 adequately completed tasks adequately completed tasks A, 9 adequately completed tasks B, 8 adequately completed tasks C, 7 adequately completed tasks D, 6 adequately completed tasks E, 5 and less adequately completed tasks. To successfully meet their term tasks, students can have no more than 2 absences.Grading scale:A = 100% – 92%B = 91% – 84%C = 83% – 76%D = 75% – 68%E = 67% – 60%Fx = 59% – 0%Violation of academic ethics will be punished, and the student will lose all the received points in the relevant assessment.Scale of assessment (preliminary/final): Scale of assessment preliminary/final: 100/0 |                                                                                 |
| Learning outcomes:As that the aim of the course is to make students familiar with economic and social history on the example of an economic entity—a feudal lordship—after successfully completing it, students                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                 | are familiar not only with the necessary historical facts on the subject, but also with an overview of the different methodological approaches and concepts used in economic and social history (as a scientific discipline), namely with the so-called history of business, micro-history, etc. Based on their own research, students are also acquainted with a wide range of topics, which define the feudal lordship as a landlord's enterprise. Students understand issues of social disciplination, communication, prosopographic research, environmental issues, etc.

| Course requirements:Students analyse the book by A. Heywood: Politické ideológie [Political Ideologies]. Every student presents a relevant topic as a main speaker once at least (for example: Conservatism, Liberalism ...) It represents 50% of classification score. The student prepares an essay (after consultation with a lecturer), in which they analyse (chyba subject) some work (for example about: Conservatism, Socialism, Communism, Nazism...). The essay represents a second part of classification score – 50%.Violation of academic ethics will be punished, and the student will lose all the received points in the relevant assessment.Grading scale:0-59%-FX, 60-67%-E, 68-75%-D, 76-83%-C, 84-91%-B, 92-100%-AScale of assessment (preliminary/final): 100/0 |                                                                      |

| Course requirements:Regular attendance at the weekly class and participation on discussions is necessary for the successful completion of this course. All students will be expected to study materials, to prepare short topics (papers) and to participate on the informal discussion. There will be final colloquium within this course. It will be focussed on testing basic knowledge of Roman private life. Violation of academic ethics will be punished, and the student will lose all the received points in the relevant assessment.Grading scale:0-59%-FX, 60-67%-E, 68-75%-D, 76-83%-C, 84-91%-B, 92-100%-AScale of assessment (preliminary/final): 100/0 |                                                          |
| Learning outcomes:The course introduces students to key aspects of private life of ancient Roman society. It is designed to form the necessary background for other courses in ancient history. On successful completion of this course, students are able to demonstrate familiarity with core features of Roman private life (Roman family, Children, Occupation, Housing and architecture etc.). Students are able to demonstrate an historical understanding of key points of Roman cultural and sociological history and an ability to evaluate the usefulness and relevance of different types of historical and archeological evidence.                                    |                                                          |

| Course requirements:An active participation on lessons – a presentation consists 50% of classification score. A written essay represents 50% of evaluation score. After the main overviews are presented, guests and speakers gradually visit the course: prof. T. Žilinka – literary scientist, which analyses the Holocaust issue in literature. Afterwards they invite to discussion about their books: Denisa Fulmeková, Milan Richter, Miloš Žiak and teatrologist and author of documentaries Dr. Anna Grusková. The rank is approximated and changes may be expected. It depends on the guest's workload, but every invited are expected to come. Required knowledge consists of recommended literature and lectures. Every participant of Special Course gets the book, the lectures (in Microsoft Power Point) and documentary about the Holocaust in Bratislava and in Slovakia on CD.Violation of academic ethics will be punished, and the student will lose all the received points in the relevant assessment.Grading scale:0-59%-FX, 60-67%-E, 68-75%-D, 76-83%-C, 84-91%-B, 92-100%-AScale of assessment (preliminary/final): 50/50 |                                                     |

| Course requirements:Students are required to attend the lessons regularly and take active part in them. They need to prepare and present a PowerPoint presentation of the term paper topic they were assigned at the first meeting. The topic of the paper concerns one of the topics listed in the syllabus hereinafter. The paper needs to have at least 5 standard pages (9,000 characters, including spaces) and is to be submitted in writing no later than the credit week. It also needs to include the bibliography. No footnotes are required, though.Grading scale:A = 100% – 92%B = 91% – 84%C = 83% – 76%D = 75% – 68%E = 67% – 60%Fx = 59% – 0%Violation of academic ethics will be punished, and the student will lose all the received points in the relevant assessment.Max. number of unjustified absences: 2.Scale of assessment (preliminary/final): 100/0 |                                                                                                          |
| Learning outcomes:At the end of the course, students have comprehensive knowledge of the history of the Kingdom of Hungary in the High Middle Ages focusing on its foreign policy. They are familiar with the growing volume of scholarly literature (especially with the latest scientific studies) concerning the topic of their paper. They are also acquainted with selected areas of the history of the Kingdom of Hungary in the High Middle Ages. The course focuses on those problems of the period that cannot be addressed in detail in the general lectures. Students are, therefore, able to locate the different specific development problems in a broader European context and can use these skills to prepare and take their state exams.                                                                                                                                                             |                                                                                                          |

| Learning outcomes:The subject has a review character, in which students get familiar with different aspects of Slovak history in the early modern period in the context of the history of the Kingdom of Hungary or the Habsburg Monarchy. The lessons consist not only of lectures but also of discussions of the topics based on the literature relevant for the session. At the end of the course, students summarize the basic development aspects of the Kingdom of Hungary between 1526 and 1780. They also get acquainted with the current local and foreign historiography and gain an overview of methodological approaches that go beyond the classical have of the political and military history.                                                                                                        |                                                                                      |

| Learning outcomes:At the end of the course, students are familiar with the way politics affected the lives of Slovak artists and vice versa, as well as with Slovak artists' engagement in politics in between 1918 and 1945. Discussions play a key role as through them students develop their own creative thinking skills concerning the different aspects of Slovak artists' engagement in politics. Special emphasis is placed on discussing the state and public activities of Slovak artists in the first Slovak Republic (1939 - 1945).                                                                                                                                                                                             |                                                                       |

| Learning outcomes:Students will gain an overview of the most important Slovak political events from the Velvet Revolution in 1989 to 2004, when Slovakia joined the European Union. During this period, the country went through significant changes that shaped and created it into its present form. Graduates of the course will be confronted with various interpretive frameworks through which they can look at the issues of recent history.                                                                                                                                              |                                                        |

| Learning outcomes:The students are able to identify political trends in South-Eastern Europe (Balkan) during the 19th and 20th Centuries. Except general characteristic of the interior policy in various regions and states (the Ottoman Empire, the forming so-called national states), the student is also able to orient in the policy of the Great Powers to Balkan (influences and conflicts between European powers). That gets them to be oriented also in current political situation in this region.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |                                                                                   |

| Learning outcomes:The students are able to identify political trends in South-Eastern Europe (Balkan) during the 19th and 20th Centuries. Except general characteristic of the interior policy in various regions and states (the Ottoman Empire, the forming so-called national states), the student is also able to orient in the policy of the Great Powers to Balkan (influences and conflicts between European powers). That gets them to be oriented also in current political situation in this region.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |                                                                                   |

| Course requirements:To be granted credits students are required to take active part in the seminars and engage in the discussions on the different topics. During the semester, each student needs to prepare a short paper (or presentation) and present it (10-15 minutes). The topics of the papers are assigned at the first meeting and correspond to the content of the specific seminars. They concern the hagiographic image of Central European male and female saints, the reasons and procedures for their canonization, etc.Classification scale:A - excellent - 100 - 92 %B - very well - 91 - 84 %C - well - 83 - 76 %D - satisfactory - 75 - 68 %E - sufficient - 67 - 60 %FX - insufficient - > 60 %Violation of academic ethics will be punished, and the student will lose all the received points in the relevant assessment.Scale of assessment (preliminary/final): 100/0 |                                                                                |
| Learning outcomes:At the end of the course, students are familiar with the latest trends used to research the beginnings of hagiography in Central and Eastern Europe on the example of the Czech Republic, Poland, the Kingdom of Hungary, Kievan Rus' and Croatia. They have extensive competencies in working with hagiographic sources and are able to apply them in their own research (for example, in writing their theses).Students are, therefore, familiar with the basic texts of medieval hagiography in the countries of Central Europe. At the end of the course, students also know the basics of the methodology for working with hagiographic texts not only of the Middle Ages in Central Europe.                                                                                                                                                                                                            |                                                                                |

| Learning outcomes:On the example of one important European family, students get familiar with the basics of dynastic politics, understand the strategy of the way highest nobility behaves (marriage policy, dynastic unions) and its transnational way of thinking. On the example of the Balkans, students understand different geopolitical aspects of European politics and the attitude of Slovaks towards them.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |                                                           |

| Learning outcomes:At the end of the course, students have a basic overview of the development of mutual relations between the Holy Roman Empire and the state units in Central Europe from the beginning of the 10th century (Battle of Pressburg) until 1526 (Battle of Mohács). They have practical experience working with sources concerning the relations between the Kingdom of Hungary and the Empire in the Middle Ages, especially their political (diplomatic and military contacts), economic, social (German colonization, German city law, trade), cultural (Central Europe as perceived by the authors of chronicles and annals of the Empire) and church history aspects. They can see the basic differences in the development of society in the Empire and in the states beyond its eastern border.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |                                                                                      |

| Learning outcomes:At the end of the course, students are familiar with the situation in the entire Eastern bloc after 1948 in connection with the political processes against the representatives of the communist parties with a special emphasis on Slovakia. They understand the origin and development of the accusations of the so-called Slovak bourgeois nationalism up to the processes against Gustáv Husák and others, and the resulting solution of the Slovak issue within Czechoslovakia. They are familiar with the domestic and foreign political scene and understand the impact the international situation had on the origin and execution of the political processes. |                                                                                                                            |

| Learning outcomes:The student analyses a status of women in the Slovak society during the 20th century in context of political, economic and social changes. After graduation of the course, the students are able to historicize and contextualize the status of women in the society. From this point of view, the subject represents a key moment for defining the diversity and character of society. It also helps to deconstruction of mythical images of power apparatus also its subsequent political and historical reflection. The students are able to analyse not only the role and impact of gender status of women in the society, but they mostly use a methodological apparatus of historical analysis of the society in general. Based on the acquired knowledge, students are able to comprehensively orient themselves in the public space of a politically defined modern society and to respond to the current challenges of society and to historical contemporary adversarial discourses. |                                                                         |

| Learning outcomes:The students have knowledge about the position of women in ancient society, of their role and agency in cultural, social, and political history. The students are able to interpret the everyday life of women in Greece and Rome from the works of the most famous ancient writers and from many epigraphic monuments. They know how to work with various ancient sources, to interpret and evaluate them. The students have also the basic overview of the sources and literature on gender studies, with a focus on antiquity, and are familiar with current issues in the field of gender studies.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                          |

| Learning outcomes:Environmental History has become one of the key topics in Slovak historiography in the recent years. Environmental history (EH) is an extremely broad, even amorphous, subject. It is concerned about the relationship between people and environment, but unlike economic history or historical geography (to which it is closely related), the environment itself shares centre stage with the people who use it. Good EH is certainly relevant, simply because environmental change by definition is something that happens historically, over time, and to ignore a time dimension is to deprive its study of any concept.The “global 20th century,” particularly its second half, unfolded in Slovakia under the conditions of state socialism and a planned economy. During this period, the country encountered both successes and failures in implementing Soviet models in agriculture and industries, especially heavy and chemical industries. A crucial aspect of this topic is the growing influence of experts who, starting from the early 1960s, frequently challenged decisions made by the authorities. In response to the severe environmental degradation experienced throughout the Eastern Bloc and the increasing |                                                   | environmental consciousness in postindustrial society, environmentalism emerged as a form of citizen activism in the late 1980s. Popular environmental movements, with their oppositional nature, played an important role in the eventual collapse of communist regimes. The aim of the second half of this course is to map out international contacts between Slovak environmentalists and their foreign counterparts and analyse how and to what extent they absorbed global environmental discourse. The first official environmental groups under the communist rule were formed in the late 1950s in Czechoslovakia and soon nature protection enthusiasts took first tentative steps beyond the borders. A small number of people had a chance to take part in the growing international youth environmental movement in the West, but it was only in the 1980s that the East-West transfer intensified.

| Learning outcomes:Students are competent to work analytically with the school's historical, written, pictorial, graphic, and physical sources. At the same time, they understand that this whole wide range of sources forms an integral part of history teaching as well as a part of history textbooks, as the main medium of teaching, since these historical sources are the final product of the whole historical cognitive process, in which they are reflected back in it. And lastly because these sources are the bearers of a unique and authentic human experience.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |                                                                      |

| Learning outcomes:Students have the basic competences to use the history textbook as the main medium of teaching, which is at the same time considered as a specific genre of historical literature. Also, the students apply their theoretical knowledge to the practical side of history textbook production. Furthermore, they have an overview of textbook research issues and acquire a critical approach to history textbooks.                                                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                               |

| Learning outcomes:At the end of the course and self study cycle, students are familiar with the development Slovak historiography went through from its beginning to the present. They are also familiar with the different periods and their characteristics, the way truth was understood in them, their institutional background, personalities and relation to the historiographies of the neighbouring countries. They are able to analyze specific key works in the context of the time, the author's work and their ideology.                                                          |                                               |

| Learning outcomes:While visiting local schools and observing lessons with a mentor teacher, students do the following: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. become familiar with the duties and obligations of being a schoolteacher</li> <li>2. receive pedagogical insight into lesson planning and implementation</li> <li>3. analyze how teachers teach and learners learn</li> <li>4. evaluate and reflect on all aspects of the teaching they observe, i.e., content, delivery, preparedness, classroom management, instructions, etc.</li> <li>5. reflect on what they observe as it relates to their own strengths and weaknesses as a student teacher</li> <li>6. discuss what they have observed with their peers and the mentor teacher, training constructive criticism and feedback skills</li> </ol> |                                                                               |

Class syllabus:

Students (in groups of 3 according to their study program) are initiated into the school environment by a mentor teacher at a local lower or upper secondary school.

They observe 10 lessons taught by that mentor teacher (or various teachers at that school).

They receive insight into lesson planning and implementation from the mentor teacher.

They provide feedback on those lessons and discuss what they learn with both the mentor teacher and within their groups.

Each completes an online observation worksheet for each lesson and, after observing all 10 lessons, writes about the experience in a reflection paper.

5. discussed what they have observed with their mentor teacher and their peers, training constructive criticism and feedback skills

Class syllabus:

Each student teacher is assigned a mentor teacher at a partner institution where they are introduced to the teaching profession as it is implemented at that institution.

Apart from learning about how the school is run and the everyday responsibilities of a teacher, student teachers are involved in both in-school and extracurricular activities, while preparing lessons plans and teaching 10 lessons under the guidance and watchful eye of their mentor teacher. Pre-lesson, they receive input into what to prepare and then again on what they have prepared.

Post-lesson, the mentor teacher provides feedback on all aspects of their teaching (i.e., content, delivery, preparedness, classroom management, instructions, etc.), with suggestions and advice for improvement.

Post practicum, the mentor teacher provides feedback to the instructor via an online questionnaire.

Post practicum, the student teacher submits their lesson plans together with a reflection paper on the experience focusing on their strengths and weaknesses as teachers for evaluation by the instructor.

| Learning outcomes:By situating the events associated with the accession of the Angevin dynasty to the Hungarian throne within the broader context of European history in the 13th and early 14th centuries, students will gain new insights into the history of Europe in the High Middle Ages. Through active participation and work with primary sources as well as major works of contemporary historiography, students will gain insight into the most important events of the High Middle Ages. The presentation of a paper on a specific topic will help improve students' communication and presentation skills.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |                                                                                    |

| Course requirements:The credit granting scheme consists of two parts:Students are required to attend the seminars regularly and take active part in the discussions (20%). They also need to carry out partial tasks consisting of studying the sources on the different topics. Students need to prepare the material for their term paper (80%). This material consists of the bibliography (sources and scholarly literature) and a historiographical chapter of their future term paper consisting of at least 5 standard pages (9,000 characters including spaces and footnotes). The historiographic chapter needs to focus mainly on describing the available sources and scholarly literature on the paper topic. Students are required to submit the finished paper chapter in the examination period. They are provided the list of eligible topics at the first meeting.Violation of academic ethics will be punished, and the student will lose all the received points in the relevant assessment.Violation of academic ethics will be punished, and the student will lose all the received points in the relevant assessment.Max. number of unjustified absences: 2.Scale of assessment (preliminary/final): 20/80 |                                                               |
| Learning outcomes:At the end of the course, students have comprehensive knowledge of the relations of the Czech Lands, the Kingdom of Hungary and the Empire in the second half of the 13th century. The term lectures and discussions cover the first part of the struggle over the Babenberg heritage (1246 - 1260). This is a two-term course, at the end of which students have detailed knowledge of the situation in Central Europe (the Kingdom of Hungary, Poland, the Czech Lands, the Holy Roman Empire) in the period in question. Having worked on their term paper, students have practical experience in formulating specialized texts, which can be elaborated on to produce their final theses. Students have an overview of the broader position of the Central European countries within the old continent, understand the relations between the ruling dynasties of the Arpads, the Přemyslids, the Sponheims, the Babenbergs, the Piasts and the Wittelsbachs. Based on the continuously assigned study sources, students are able to understand and analyze the foreign policy direction of the leading representatives of Central Europe.                                                                                      |                                                               |

| Course requirements:The credit granting scheme consists of two parts:Students are required to attend the seminars regularly and take active part in the discussions (20%). They also need to carry out partial tasks consisting of studying the sources on the different topics. Students need to prepare a term paper (80%), including a historiographical chapter from the Struggle over the Babenberg Heritage 1 course. The term paper needs to be at least 20 standard pages long (36,000 characters, including spaces and notes). This term paper is the result of the student's systematic work during both course terms. Students are required to submit the finished term paper chapter in the examination period. To sign in for this course, students are required to have completed the War for Babenberg Heritage 1 course.Violation of academic ethics will be punished, and the student will lose all the received points in the relevant assessment.Max. number of unjustified absences: 2.Scale of assessment (preliminary/final): 20/80                                                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                               |
| Learning outcomes:At the end of the course, students have comprehensive knowledge of the relations of the Czech Lands, the Kingdom of Hungary and the Empire in the second half of the 13th century. The term lectures and discussions cover the second part of the struggle over the Babenberg heritage (1260 - 1278). This is a two-term course, at the end of which students have detailed knowledge of the situation in Central Europe (the Kingdom of Hungary, Poland, the Czech Lands, the Holy Roman Empire) in the period in question. Having worked on their term paper, students have practical experience in formulating specialized texts, which can be elaborated on to produce their final theses. Students have an overview of the broader position of the Central European countries within the old continent, understand the relations between the ruling dynasties of the Arpads, the Přemyslids, the Sponheims, the Babenbergs, the Piasts, the Wittelsbachs and the Habsburgs. Based on the continuously assigned study sources, students are able to understand and analyze the foreign policy direction of the leading representatives of Central Europe. Its core is the foreign policy of kings Belo IV, Stephen V and Ladislaus IV between 1260 and 1278. |                                                               |

| Course requirements: The student must submit the master's thesis within the deadline specified in the schedule of the current academic year for the relevant date of the state exam. The master's thesis is submitted in electronic form via AIS. The work must meet the parameters determined by the internal quality system of Comenius University. The provisions of Article 14 of Internal Regulation no. 5/2020 (Study Regulations of the Faculty of Arts of Comenius University) apply to the evaluation of the master's thesis. The supervisor of the final thesis and its opponent will prepare evaluations of the master's thesis and propose a grade in the A-FX grading scale, which the student receives a minimum of three working days before the defence. Grading scale: 0-59% -FX, 60-67% -E, 68-75% -D, 76-83% -C, 84-91% -B, 92-100% -A Master's thesis evaluation criteria: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. The contribution of the master's thesis, the fulfilment of the objectives of the thesis in its assignment, and the requirements for the content of the master's thesis given by the internal quality system of Comenius University. It is assessed whether the student has worked on the chosen topic at the level of scientific study, with a representative selection of scientific literature, with appropriately chosen scientific procedures and hypotheses that can be verified. Demonstration of the ability to work creatively in the study program is evaluated and the degree of demonstration of knowledge and understanding of the diploma thesis is reflected.</li> <li>2. Originality of the work (master's thesis must not be plagiarized, must not infringe the copyrights of other authors); the documentation for the defence of the master's thesis also includes protocols of originality from the CRZP and Theses systems, to the results of which the thesis supervisor and the opponent express their opinions in their evaluations.</li> <li>3. Correctness and accuracy of citation of used information sources, research results of other authors and group authors, correctness of the description of methods and working procedures of other authors or group authors.</li> <li>4. Compliance of the structure of the master's thesis with the prescribed composition defined by the internal quality system of Comenius University.</li> <li>5. Respecting the recommended length of the master's thesis (the recommended length of the master's thesis is usually 50 – 70 standard pages = 90,000 to 126,000 characters, including spaces), the adequacy of the length of the thesis is assessed by the thesis supervisor.</li> <li>6. Linguistic and stylistic level of work and formal adjustments.</li> </ol> The student orally presents the content, achieved goals, and conclusions of the master's thesis, and answers the questions and comments of the thesis supervisor, opponent, or members of the examination committee. | Learning outcomes: The student has mastered the basic requirements of writing a scientific text in compliance with the rules of academic ethics. The student knows the methods used in the field of study, is able to work on the chosen topic of the master's thesis at the level of scientific study, with a representative selection of scientific literature, with appropriately chosen scientific procedures and hypotheses that can be verified. After a successful defence of the master's thesis, the student is able to design, implement, critically reflect, and justify his research intention. The student understands the context of the problem, can clearly define research conclusions, state his positions, and make recommendations. He can respond argumentatively and flexibly to questions about the research topic, its methodology, and its conclusions.                                                                                                                                                     |

| Learning outcomes:Students will become acquainted, in an accessible manner, with metamodernism as a way of understanding the emotionality of the contemporary subject. This will enable them to engage with contemporary literature in a more layered and reflective way and to better understand the experience of the contemporary reader in its specific characteristics: in connection with their new affect, their striving for a new sincerity, and their search for a new depth (the value of being) through affective and self-affirming experience of the self within time, space, and corporeal being.At the same time, students will become familiar with autofiction as one of the most popular literary genres of the present—one that blurs the boundary between narrator and author and embodies new (metamodern) forms of experiencing time and space. |                                                   |

Concurrently, they will acquire philologically relevant conceptual tools for thinking about time and space in the 20th and 21st centuries. This knowledge will enable them to reflect in a nuanced way on current metamodern tendencies, drawing from the dialogical philosophy of Mikhail M. Bakhtin, classical phenomenology, the hermeneutics of Hans-Georg Gadamer, postmodern philosophy, the spatial turn in the humanities, and Paul Virilio's phenomenology of speed.

In this way, students will gain a panoramic overview of how time and space are understood in modern and contemporary humanities, develop sensitivity to time and space as both existential and literary categories, and acquire an interpretive-methodological foundation for a mode of their reading that is both critical and meaning-oriented—that is, metamodern—in literary as well as non-literary contexts.

Class syllabus:

Metamodernism as a response to postmodernism and its value-depleted space; metamodernism as oscillation between ironic skepticism and sincerity; metamodernism as a reading of the structure of feeling of the contemporary subject; new affect as a desire to restore sincerity, emotionality, and existential engagement—while maintaining critical awareness of their historical mediation and problematic nature; relational subjectivity as an attempt at meaning-oriented self-experience in time, space, and embodied being; conceptions of time and space in the history of modern philosophy and literary theory; Mikhail Mikhailovich Bakhtin, the architectonics of the event, and the chronotope; phenomenology of time in classical phenomenological philosophy; temporality in Hans-Georg Gadamer's hermeneutics; the postmodern turn to space (Michel Foucault and Jean-François Lyotard); rhizomatic space (Gilles Deleuze & Félix Guattari); postmodern experience of space and capitalism (Fredric Jameson, David Harvey); Henri Lefebvre and his influence on the spatial turn in the humanities; spatiality in the thought of Doreen Massey; cultural critique and the phenomenology of speed in the work of Paul Virilio.

1. Introduction: Metamodernism as a reading of the contemporary subject and their structure of feeling
2. Metamodernism, relational subjectivity, and current modes of self-experience in time and space
3. Mikhail Mikhailovich Bakhtin and his architectonics of the event
4. Mikhail Mikhailovich Bakhtin and his chronotopic thought
5. Toward a phenomenology of time (Edmund Husserl, Maurice Merleau-Ponty)
6. Hans-Georg Gadamer's "empty" and "fulfilled" time
7. The postmodern turn to space I: Michel Foucault and Jean-François Lyotard
8. The postmodern turn to space II: The rhizomatic model (Gilles Deleuze & Félix Guattari)
9. Postmodern space as a symptom of capitalism (Fredric Jameson, David Harvey)
10. The spatial turn in the humanities I: Henri Lefebvre and the social production of space
11. The spatial turn in the humanities II: Doreen Massey and space as a dynamic network of relations
12. Paul Virilio and his phenomenology of speed
13. How to experience oneself in contemporary time and space? Analysis of contemporary autofiction
14. Final in-class essay

| Course requirements:a) during the teaching part (ongoing): the seminar is organised in cooperation with the Goethe Institute in the form of Blended Learning. During the semester, students submit assignments electronically, which take approximately 3-4 hours to complete, with a minimum of 75% of all assignments to be submitted. At the same time, three attendance meetings are held during the course of the session with compulsory attendance. At the end of the semester, a practicum project is to be developed and presented. Active work in class throughout the semester, working on assignments and preparing and presenting the project constitutes 100% of the grade. The student must achieve a minimum of 60% pass mark. b) In the examination period: 100% continuous assessment Violation of academic ethics will result in the cancellation of the points earned in the relevant item of assessment. | Learning outcomes:The students can productively apply methods of lyric analysis and interpretation, formulate and justify their own suggestions for interpretation and communicate intersubjectively about interpretations. They know German love poetry from the Baroque to the present and expand their knowledge of literary history. They know canonical and (as yet) non-canonical poems of German-language culture and relevant lyricists. They gain insight into literary, sociological and discourse-historical research theories and can use these for the interpretation of texts. They deal with the existential topics of love, identity and gender in a historical perspective and recognise changeability and continuities. They train their linguistic and scientific competences.            |                                                               |
| Class syllabus:The selected love poems are to be located within a triangle of literary history, love discourse and gender discourse, whose components range from the Baroque to the present. The focus is on a) Petrarchism, Anacreontics, Sturm und Drang, Romanticism, literary modernism, Expressionism, Neue Sachlichkeit, contemporary poetry, b) love in times of arranged marriages, the "invention" of romantic love around 1800, continued effects, problematisation and alternative concepts c) from the "one-sex-model" to the "two-sex-model" to gender as a social construct. Love poetry by men and women is dealt with and related to each other. Guiding questions are: Who speaks about love, when and to whom? What taboos are there and what transgressions? How is individual and social |                                                               |
