Educational level: II.
Prerequisites:
Course requirements:
Learning outcomes: Students will acquire the ability to translate an artistic text on a chosen topic, stylistic abilities and learn how to work with the final text in the target language.
Class syllabus: Students are introduced to the artistic translation of texts by modern and contemporary Chinese authors such as Wang Shuo, Gao Xinjian, Mao Yan, Liao Yiwu, Mian Mian and others. They learn to work with Chinese text when translating, finding appropriate synonyms and translation solutions, but also work with the final text in the target language. Students work on translations, versions of which are compared to those of their classmates, to acquire the basics of artistic translation skills. In addition to the correctness of the translation, its aesthetic function is also important. They learn to find their own variations regarding the translation problems they are confronted with, such as the translation of literary heroes' names and titles. They get to know the language in its literary form and try to translate it into a literary form in the Slovak language. They determine the style of the translation, look for the appropriate language not only from a linguistic point of view, but mainly in regard to the translation of an artistic text with its own right, in preserving the original semantic level and connotations as much as possible, and exploring the possibility of using slang or colloquial expressions, for example. Foreign students who do not speak Slovak well produce translations into English.
